

There were always at least two rooms in a tent. A piece of goat's hair cloth hung down in between the two rooms. This was like a wall between two rooms.

One of these rooms belonged to mother and the children. This room was also the kitchen and storeroom for the family. In the day time, the side curtains were not rolled up on this side of the tent. This room was PRIVATE. No one went into this room without being invited. Even father had to ask permission before he could come in. Mother was usually in this room because she had much work to do here.

Father often stayed in the other room in the tent. The sides were rolled up during the day. If guests came, father welcomed them here.
